THE TM HAUS, IN THE BAYARIAN VILLAGE OF THEISELBERG, USES LARGE
SQUARE WINDOWS TO BRING COLOUR FROM
THE LANDSCAPE INTO
THE AUSTERE CONCRETE
AND WHITE INTERIOR

Haus proud

Three German architecture firms improving the local Gestaltung

TM Haus, Theiselberg

The TM Haus, by Bavarian practice Sollo Architektur, matches a rendered interior with white interior walls and floors (as well as the occasional touch of concrete). The result is a grand sequence of spaces that belies the house's small scale. Located on the edge of a small village, the modest three-bedroom dwelling was designed to evoke the modest agricultural buildings in the region, with a barn-like shallow roof pitch and a scattering of square windows. Internal surfaces were chosen to add richness to the simple material palette, and special care was taken to match up the views to the big to bring splashes of colour into the austere interior, with its extensive built-in storage and rough concrete stairway.
